“ Pat worked in western Oklahoma during the deep-gas drilling boom of the early-1980s. He would joke about his well being a “show-horse.” It was where the company would steer visiting officials, media, and potential clients. The company was showing off its best equipment. But Pat never mentioned the obvious—Pat was modest to a fault—that his well was also where the company put its best people.

“ Pat's was one of the best-constructed personalities I've ever encountered. He was a quiet and gentle man, with a highly-developed sense of fair play, but it was never wrong to remember that those things were part of a temperament that could also produce an All-State defensive tackle.

“ Lynn- Our prayers and love go out to you and your family.
I remember Pat asking me if you were single as he was painting your house after the tornado....he obviously was very interested!!
Later, he told me if she needs help financially fixing the house he would donate his time to paint it.
It was a joy to see you both married and happy!!
He was very kind and loving!
Our prayers are with you!

'Pat' was my first roommate in college at Mizzou. I was a city boy and Pat was a salt of the Earth. We were both enrolled in Engineering. I learned much from him in our short time together about small town life as roommates. I love you Patrick.
