“ I also lost a child. Though Shelley was an adult, the pain is the same. Here are some suggestions I have for you: waterproof mascara for at least a year, it's ok to not have a stone for awhile - or ever, it's ok to visit the cemetery as often as you want. I used antidepressants - they can help. I made an Italian charm bracelet with special mementos of Shelley (diet coke, books, cats, etc.) - I don't think you can get them at the store anymore but they're still available online. The thing that helped me the most was a website - silentgrief.com - Those people understood exactly what I was going through. I am so sorry for your loss; nothing compares to losing a child.

“ To the family of Shante Caton,
While you do not know me, I'd still like to express my condolences for the loss of your little girl. Reading the obituary I couldn't help thinking about the hope found in God's Word the Bible; a hope I'm sure you're familiar with. We learn that one day "all those in the memorial tombs will hear [Jesus] voice and come out" (John 5:28, 29). You all will one day be able to see little Shante and you'll be able to enjoy her forever because "death will be no more" (Revelation 21:4). Psalm 37:29 says: "The righteous themselves will possess the earth, and they will reside forever upon it." What a wonderful hope. I hope this brings you comfort during this difficult time.
